Not As Scary As It Looks

This month's Featured Part is a tricky little sheet metal cover with a hinge on either end, fabricated from a vintage 1973 drawing. This part begins with a flat pattern that is punched utilizing our turret punch. The holes are then countersunk before the parts move on to the forming department. Forming the arc and then locating the subsequent bends is one of the trickier aspects of this part, but with our experienced press brake department it's no problem. Finally a custom weld fixture holds the tubes in proper alignment for welding to create the hinge knuckles on either end of the part.
